Call for Times Talks

Throughout the year, the American Democracy Project facilitates short lunch presentations called Times Talks, in the South Study Area of Forsyth Library, on Tuesdays at 12PM, or on Wednesdays at 12:30PM. The New York Times sponsors catering from Chartwells for the first 20 people who attend each presentation. All students, staff, and faculty have the ability to present information at a Times Talk. Our goal in the American Democracy Project is that these events function as a forum for all members of the FHSU community to share their research, passions, or projects with anyone who attends the Talk! In the past, we've had presentations from administrators on Title IX, from student classes on projects they're working on, and from faculty on different subjects they teach.

Right now, we are trying to set a schedule for this semester, so if you have a great idea for a Times Talk, let us know so we can get a date set! We would really like to get more students presenting this year so please reach out to your students and ask them if they would like to present! Thank you so much for your time and consideration.

For more information, please contact Megan Garcia, Jasmine Turley, American Democracy Project, Center for Civic Leadership
